IB enhances assessment

IB schools in Arizona joined forces for the fourth annual IB Day of Service on 15 November to mark a day of statewide service-oriented learning. Led by the Arizona International Baccalaureate Schools (AZIBS), this year's IB Day of Service engaged nearly 30 IB World Schools (IBWS) in community-focused projects designed to help students experience the real-world impact of service.

Governor Katie Hobbs has officially recognized IB Day of Service as an annual event, underscoring Arizona's commitment to community building and global citizenship.

Among the projects, 80 students from Chandler High School helped gather and distribute 1,500 food bags at United Food Bank, a local partner close to the school's campus. At Anasazi Elementary School, a Primary Years Program (PYP) IB school, students from preschool to fifth grade partnered with Operation Gratitude to write letters to veterans, active service members, and first responders, honoring them for their dedication.

"The IB Day of Service helps students connect with the community in meaningful ways," explained Robey Brown, Chandler High's Service Learning Coordinator. "It opens their eyes to the real-life challenges that people face and fosters compassion. Students also learn more about themselves, discovering what they enjoy and where their strengths lie—whether it's assisting people directly or working behind the scenes."

DP student participant Judah Knipmeyer stated, "It's about growing a sense of responsibility and understanding each person's role in supporting their community. I also gained valuable skills in
